Introducing the Steeple Jack Range - the Latest Offering from Ballast Stone.

After 25 years of wine industry experience, Ballast Stone Estate was established by the Shaw family in Currency Creek, located adjacent to Lake Alexandrina and a mere 4kilometres from the Southern Ocean. Their holdings include 1,200 acres of vines in McLaren Vale and Currency Creek and state-of-the-art winery facilities.

This idyllic location promises the best from both worlds, combining the two geographic regions of Currency Creek and McLaren Vale to produce wines which are influenced by McLaren Vale's powerful fruit presence and display the distinctive varietal finesse of Currency Creek. This regional definition is best demonstrated in the Ballast Stone range, an ultra premium wine brand consisting of sparkling, white and red wines.

The area of Currency Creek is also rich in historical significance, from which the name Ballast Stone is derived. The small town of Goolwa is located a few kilometres away, home to the most important river port in South Australia in the 1800's where sailing ships unloaded ballast stone to refill their holds for their return trip to England.

Skilled stonemasons crafted buildings on Ballast Stone Estate and other buildings around South Australia are made from this stone, including Government house and the Old Adelaide Gaol. The Stonemason range is honest and approachable, consisting of super premium wines.

Last but not least, enter Steeple Jack, the latest release from the Ballast Stone family of wines. As an entry level brand, the packaging may be bright and fun but the wine is definitely serious drinking, offering a premium, easy drinking wine at an affordable price.

Why Steeple Jack, you might ask? Steeple Jacks played a crucial role in constructing and maintaining townships, completing stonework on the highest towers, oblivious to all vertigo, gravity and mortality. As the youngest member of the Ballast Stone family, Steeple Jack lives by the dictum, "Extreme lifestyles ... seriously good wine".

The Shaw family has an extensive history in the Australian Wine Industry. From the outset, their dream was to create a vibrant family business resulting in the expansion of their vineyard holdings and winery development to provide opportunities for future generations.
