

Victorian Employers and Workers Warned Don't Drop the Ball' on Health and Safety

Workers in all occupations across the state are being urged to 'learn the latest and stay up to date' by attending a free seminar during this years Victorian Work Safe Week.

'Learn the latest and stay up to date' is this years Work Safe Week theme. It's a reminder that we can all benefit from a little more information on preventing workplace injuries.

Work Safe Week from 22-26 October is an opportunity to hear and see the latest health and safety initiatives.

Work Safe Week seminars will be led by marathon swimmer Tammy Van Wisse, North Pole adventurer Graeme Joy, workplace injury survivor Phillip Smallman (paraplegic as a result of a fall), Victorian Coroner Graeme Johnstone and psychologist Dr. Michael Carr-Greg.

"Along with Victoria's growing population, the number of workplaces and job opportunities is rising. That means more people need to learn the latest and stay up to date with the safest possible work practices" said Mr. Merritt.

Registrations are now open for free seminars including the latest on manual handling, issues facing young workers, effective return to work, work-related fatigue, stress prevention and a 'back to basics' information session for manufacturing workers.

Book your seats today by going to www.worksafe.vic.gov.au and check out the event calendar for seminars near you.

Use A Licensed Security Provider

Australia's $5 billion private security industry is one of the most dynamic and rapidly growing sectors of the economy and one that is growing in size and complexity every day. Improving levels of training and professionalism in the industry have resulted in higher standards and increasing consumer confidence.

When you consider the contribution made by the security industry every day around the country, you realise just how important this industry is to the community.

At a time when a growing number of Australians are relying on the services provided by the industry, Australia's peak security body, the Australian Security Industry Association (ASIAL) is urging retailers to make an informed choice when choosing a security provider.

ASIAL CEO Bryan de Caires states "when it comes to protecting your business or property don't take any chances. Always use an appropriately licensed security provider and make sure they are an ASIAL member. ASIAL Members are bound by a professional code of conduct and are committed to providing the highest standards."

The message is simple, make sure you always use an appropriately licensed security professional and look for the ASIAL logo when choosing your security provider, it's your mark of distinction.
